NEW PERSIAN – ENGLISH DICTIONARY

COMPLETE AND MODERN

Designed to give the English meanings of over 50,000 words, terms, idioms, and proverbs in the Persian language, as well as the transliteration of the words in English characters

Together with a sufficient treatment of all the grammatical features of the Persian language

PREFACE

After the compilation of the New English-Persian Dictionary, which, to the author's encouragement, proved a real success both in its circulation and usefulness, it seemed quite natural that a companion volume should appear in due course of time in the form of a new Persian-English dictionary. Moreover, the crying need for an up-to-date dictionary of the Persian language, and the earnest desire of the author to lay a foundation for compiling such a dictionary, urged him to undertake the arduous task of producing a modern, and at the same time, a literary Persian-English dictionary.

The present work is designed to be the fullest, most modern, and most accurate of all the Persian-English dictionaries hitherto compiled. It is expected to be comprehensive in its scope, and systematic in the arrangement of the various senses of the words and phrases which it gives. If this expectation has not been fully realised, the reason may be ascribed to special difficulties outlined below.

First, owing to the absence of any national dictionary of the modern Persian language, the author had the double task of ascertaining first the meaning of each Persian word or expression, and then finding for it an exact, or nearly exact, English rendering. This was the more difficult, since in numerous instances there was diversity of opinion among various people as to the definitions and meanings of the particular words about which they were consulted.

Second, there was the difficulty of ascertaining the actual existence of hundreds of words given in various old dictionaries, and of their variant forms and pronunciations. Indeed, Persian literature is so extensive, and literary productions in this language are so numerous, that it can scarcely be said that any one man has read, and is acquainted with, all that deserves to be inserted in a dictionary of the Persian language

Three special features of this work, in particular, distinguish it from all those previously published. One is the strict grammatical treatment of the words. This should make the dictionary especially useful, since grammar is justly the sole foundation upon which the lexicographer must build. To this end, the author has for the first time in the history of Persian grammar, introduced Persian abbreviations symbolizing the various parts of speech.

The second feature, not less important than the first, is the citation of numerous examples to show how the words are used. It has often been said that a dictionary without examples is much the same as a mere skeleton. This is particularly true in the case of Persian words which, like those of some other Indo-European languages, undergo various grammatical changes in their usage. One example is the word درست which, as an adjective, means 'honest', 'correct', etc., as an adverb, 'exactly' and 'correctly', and as a noun 'gold or silver money'. So also are many verbs which are used both transitively and intransitively. All these variations are best explained by furnishing examples. Some of my predecessors, in trying to enrich their dictionaries by examples, have resorted only to quotations from classical literature, and their examples are usually verses which, in many cases, are the only instances where those words have been used, words that are uncommon in the present spoken or written Persian. As a matter of fact, most of our ancient lexicographers have paid little attention to words popularly used, or those with which one comes in contact in everyday life. That is to say, they have either omitted such words altogether, or have mentioned them with no definitions taking it for granted that they are known by everybody, or that they are self-evident.

Of this type of dictionaries is the Borhaneh-Ghale', which has gained the reputation of being one of the greatest and most famous dictionaries of the Persian language. Frankly speaking, the above mentioned dictionary is far from being what is called a popular dictionary, since it not only leaves out the Arabic element with which the Persian language is thoroughly permeated but very many Persian words of common usage, being an ordinary How much less then can we expect the Borhan to treat Turkish and European elements in our language!

The third feature of this dictionary which seems to the author most valuable of all, is its scientific and technical usefulness. Education in general, and public instruction in particular, have developed in Persia, thousands of special terms have been introduced into the language by various competent groups or individuals, and although many of these terms are to be found in scientific books written in Persian, yet there are, in common arts and sciences, a good many other terms that circulate from mouth to mouth only. These terms presented a special difficulty to the author who had to be constantly alert to gather them from every available source, now raking through various source material, now consulting some one who was competent to define a particular term. On no occasion has the author overlooked that precept of the illustrious poet of Persia, which reads

which may loosely be rendered thus:—

ASK WHAT YOU DO NOT KNOW;
FOR THOUGH IN THAT THERE'S SHAME,
THE SHAME WILL LEAD SOMEHOW TO DIGNITY AND FAME

As a whole, the author makes no undue pretensions as to the preparation of the present dictionary, when he claims that this is the first time that the words and phrases of modern Persian, spoken or written, vulgar or literary, have been given scientific treatment and analysis.

At the outset of the compilation of this work, a friend suggested that 'a dictionary should not disappoint him who consults it', intending thereby that it should have a vocabulary rich enough to supply the needs of all types of users, and that all possible senses of a word should be given. It so happened that the work was being planned on a large scale, and that the publishers were ready to print it in two volumes. Nevertheless, this friendly suggestion so stimulated the author that he was induced to insert in the dictionary many rare Persian and Arabic words, but only such rare words as are agreed upon by all or most of our lexicographers, or for which there is given in each case at least one instance in Persian literature.

However, from another point of view, it is impossible for a dictionary to satisfy everybody. In the case of this dictionary, for example, some would wish that it might contain no Persian words of rare usage, others would eliminate all Arabic words, while a third group of people would believe in compiling either a very concise dictionary of common words only, or one which would exhaust the language by giving every possible word and its variant forms, a practice that would entirely disregard the principle of the golden mean.

If rare words are given, it is not an indication that the author has intended to encourage their use, it is because they actually exist in the works of the ancient writers and poets, and the modern student who meets with them occasionally should know them, or at least have some authority to consult for their meanings.

To conclude, in view of the special difficulties outlined above, the author must plead for the most sympathetic consideration on the part of the public for all omissions and slips that may be discovered in this work, since HUMANUM EST ERRARE, and errors can be rectified only when judgments given by the public are not imbued with a cavilling spirit.

The author wishes also to extend his thanks and express his gratitude to all those friends who, during the progress of the work, helped him with the proper English rendering for certain words and with other worthy suggestions. He is greatly indebted to various dictionaries from which he has gathered valuable hints and information, such as Steingass (in spite of its not being up to date), and more particularly to the Persian-Russian dictionary of Mirza Abdollah Ghaffaroff, which was found to approach very nearly the idea of a modern dictionary, although published some twenty years ago. Credit must also be given to the publishers who have spared no trouble or expense to promote a work of this nature, which, it is hoped, will be of real service to the public.

S. Haim

The Plan of the Dictionary with Directions for Use.

1. In order to preserve a strict alphabetical order in the vocabulary, (1) the sign (ـَ), which is originally an alef, has been given precedence to (ب), since, when it is used over an alef, the result is really a double alef. Thus the word آویر comes far ahead of ابر. However, this is not observed in cases when آ occurs in the middle of a word, as in the word بدآمد which follows باق bodagh, and this is because it is not pronounced bad-amad Hamzeh, appearing in the form of any letter, has been treated as that letter, but at the end of a word, it has not been taken into account, having been omitted even in some cases. See اقضاء & انتلاب
2. Simple and compound words are treated alike in respect to their alphabetical order. Compound expressions in which the parts are connected through an ezafeh, as well as compound verbs, are given under the respective main words. Thus ریشه حور which means 'galangal', although a special medical term, is not considered as a separate word, because its parts are connected by the ezafeh. The expression is, therefore, treated under the word ریشه reesheh, 'root'. So also جیره دادن jeereh-dadan, 'to ration', falls under جیره jeereh, 'a ration' from which it is construed, and is not printed in bold letters, while جیره حور jeereh-khor, being a real compound word, appears in the vocabulary next to the word jeereh, and is printed in bold letters.
3. The origins of non-Persian words are indicated by means of English abbreviations used throughout the whole dictionary. Thus A. means Arabic, T. Turkish, F. French, A.P. Arabic & Persian, etc. (See List of English Abbreviations).

- 4 When a word has one or more variant forms, English meanings are given only for the most common form to which all the other variants are referred. For example بادنگان badengan is not so common as بادنجان badenjan; hence for its meaning reference is made to the latter variant.
- 5 Commas and semicolons are used to separate synonymous and nearly synonymous meanings respectively. But the different senses and meanings of a word are separated by periods, numbers, or the double bar ||. Thus the meanings of دار No 3 are arranged in the following manner 'A house Seat, place' It is easily understood then that دار No 3. has two different meanings.
- 6 Wherever by the use of Persian abbreviations it is indicated that a word serves as more than one part of speech the various grammatical senses are separated by numerals. For example, ربط which is both a noun and an adjective, is treated as follows.

1 A hermit ربط (rabeet) ا.م.

2. Tied, fastened.

This signifies that No 1 treats the word in its substantive sense, and No. 2 treats it adjectivally.

- 7 The abbreviation R. (i.e. rare) in many cases means that it is not desired to encourage the use of the word indicated. For this reason the abbreviation has not been used for the Persian words آبچین abchin and آسوار absavar, which may respectively replace the Arabic synonyms حوله howleh, 'a towel', and حاب hobab, 'a bubble'.
- 8 If care is taken to read and understand all the grammatical abbreviations and notes, as well as parenthetical explanations given for certain words, the dictionary will be found of special value and usefulness. But if one is not interested in such details, let him not be hindered from obtaining at least the actual meanings of a word, which is the essential thing. In this case all the Persian and English abbreviations, the grammatical notes or explanations, and anything written in italics and inserted within brackets [] may be disregarded.

- 9 The pronunciation used in Teheran, the capital of Persia, has been taken as the basis for the transliteration of Persian words in English characters. This refers in particular to words ending in e, which represents originally the vowel sound a, but which is pronounced in Teheran as eh. For example خانه which should originally be pronounced khanah is transliterated khaneh, and حافظه originally pronounced hafzat in Arabic is transliterated hafzeh (The word خانه is pronounced khaneh especially when it happens to be alone, or when it is connected to another word through the ezafeh).

Furthermore, no distinction has been made between the different s sounds in Arabic, that is to say, the s sounds in سوال , صفت , and ثابته , although pronounced differently in Arabic, have been disregarded in this dictionary, because the Persians as a whole pronounce all three as s in English. The same applies to the different z sounds of Arabic, i. e. the words دج , دهر , صاس , and طهر have all been transliterated with z. The letters غ and ق are also for the same reason treated alike and represented by gh in English.

- 10 When part of a definition is inserted in parentheses (), the definition may be read both with the part in the parentheses and without it. Thus the definition of روزه خور which reads «(One) who breaks his fast» is really a double definition (1) «One who breaks his fast» and (2) «Who breaks his fast». In the one case the word has been treated as a noun, in the other case as an adjective. Another example is the word ریل or رل , the English rendering of which is '(European) sheep', signifying that the Persian word may be translated either 'sheep', or, for the sake of clearness and exactness, 'European sheep'. Similarly, when part of a word is inserted within the parentheses, we might say we have two words, as in «neglect(fulness)» which can be read «neglect» or «neglectfulness». In most cases such words are synonyms.
11. Wherever the pronunciation of a simple word has been given in English characters, it is not given again if further particles or elements are added to the word, in which case the pronunciation of the additional part only is given. Thus in the case of بشانی کشاده and بشانی only the second parts of the compounds, شد and کشاده are transliterated, because the pronunciation of the basic word بشانی has been already given

- 12 Two or more words of different origins that are spelled or pronounced alike have been treated separately and distinguished by numbers. For example ریره meaning «cumin-seed» and ریره meaning «sole», being of different origins, are given twice in the vocabulary, the former under No. 1, the latter under No. 2. The same treatment is applied to زهر which in Persian means 'poison', and in Arabic 'flower'. Therefore, in looking up a particular word, one should glance also at the words immediately preceding and following it, so that one may be sure to obtain the desired meaning.
13. At the end of each volume there is a supplement under the head of Addenda, which contains (1) certain common and useful words, such as اقتصاد 'economy', اقوره assafetida, etc., words which did not come to hand until after the dictionary went to press, (2) certain rare Arabic and Persian words given in other dictionaries, (3) a few proper names of persons and localities, such as اویسی Avicenna, اورمرد Ormuzd, ادره Adrianople, etc., and, (4) certain European words used commonly in Persian, as اومبیل automobile, اسدھیک carbolic acid, etc. Therefore, for words and expressions missing in the dictionary proper, the Addenda should be consulted, and probably such words or expressions will be found there.
- 14 In view of the numerous variants existing for Persian words, a study should be made of the interchangeability of certain Persian letters so that if one form of a word is not given, the variant form may be looked up. Thus the letters ب and پ being interchangeable with each other, the words مادزهر add بادزهر are variants.

The Pronouncing System.

The following system has been arbitrarily adopted in transcribing the words in English characters

I. Vowels.

(a) The Short Vowel-Sounds

- 1 The vowel-sound (—^ː) is indicated by a, always pronounced as the a in the English word ast. Ex رست rast
- 2 The vowel sound (—) is indicated by e, always pronounced as the e in the English word bet Ex تابت sabet
- 3 The vowel sound (—^ˈ) is indicated by o always pronounced as in the English word obey Ex اطلاق otagh, and عبد obeyd.

(b) The Long Vowel-sounds

- 4 The vowel (alef) is indicated by the ordinary 'a' (not italic), always pronounced as in the English word far Ex نثار nesar, and بغداد Baghdad (See the consonant alef below).
- 5 The vowel و (vaṡ) is indicated by oo, always pronounced as in the English word boot Ex تابوت taboot (See the consonant vaṡ below)
- 6 The vowel ی (yeh) is indicated by ee, as in the English word feed. Ex مفید mofeed Before a quiescent ى however, it is pronounced short, being indicated by i Ex زمين zamin. (See the consonant yeh below)

II. Consonants.

(a) The Consonant alef (ا)

- 1 The consonant alef, called hamzeh in Arabic, when accompanied by the vowel-sound (—^ː) is indicated by the italic o ابر abr But when beginning a word, and followed by the alef, (in which case it appears in the form آ), it is indicated the ordinary 'a', as in آت alat

(5) The letter ی at the end of a noun, pronoun, adjective, or past participle, is equal in meaning to the verb هستی has'ti, thou art Ex تو سراری Thou art a soldier, خداوند من دریی Thou art my Lord; اگر عاقلی if thou art wise, تو رفته‌ای Thou art gone

(6) At the end of the bare infinitive, the letter ی serves as a pronoun of the 2nd pers. s. for the formation of the past tense. Ex آیا thou saidst, آیا رفتی? Didst thou not go?

(7) Lastly, in bookish or poetic styles, the letter ی is equivalent, at the end of the bare infinitive, to the particle می which is prefixed to the past tense to make it progressive or conditional Ex (a) گفت هر روز او را مردد He said, "I saw (or used to see) him every day at the door of that house but did not speak a word" The ordinary forms of the verbs in this sentence are می‌گفتم and می‌دیدم respectively (b) اگر او آنجا بودی If he had been there he would not have said that The ordinary way would be او آنجا (می) بود ایستاد را میبرد

Two rules must be considered in regard to adjoining ی to a word, wherever the word in question ends in a vowel-sound (1) If a word ends in the vowel-sound or ال, a hamzeh, in the shape and sound of ی, should be put between the word and the letter ی which is to be added Ex موی mooyee, hairy, from مو moo, hair; گدای gadayee, beggary; from گدا gada, beggar

The ی of this category is also used to indicate agency, and the noun to which it is added does not necessarily become an adjective Thus آخری besides meaning 'made of brick', means also آخر فروش or brick-seller

In Ar also, the letter ی has almost the same use as the P ی treated under this category, except that it is pronounced with a tashdeed, as in mantaghiyy, logical (also logician) However, this exception is disregarded by the Iranians who pronounce mantaghee and elahee (divine)

This ی is called by the Arabs ياء the ی of relation, esp. in derivations of the names of cities, etc., as مکی makkīyy, of Mecca, مدنی madaniyy, of Medina, etc But the Persian ی of relation is a shortened form of the old suffix -eek which survives in داريك & برديك, and of ين, which occurs in زری golden, پشمی woollen, etc

(4) The letter ی at the end of the antecedent of a relative pronoun که keh, often specifies it, or restricts its sense, thus becoming the equivalent of the E definite article 'the' or demonstrative pronoun 'that' Ex (a) مردی که اینجا آمد زرگر بود The man who came here was a goldsmith (b) اسد را که آرزو داشت ندادند They did not give him the horse that he wished

[Note The ی of this category, which may be called the 'specific' ی, should not be confounded with the indefinite or singular ی of the first category Very often the distinction depends upon the sense or the context Thus دوايی means 'it is a

have (certain) books that are useful (b) علم دستور را قواعدی هست Grammar has certain rules The vulgar often supply the numeral adjective يك before a noun ending in the indefinite or singular ی, even when it is plural Ex يك جاهايی هست There are places which

(2) Added to an adjective, or to a concrete noun, the letter ی changes it to an abstract noun thus rendering the E suffixes -ness, -ship, -hood, and the like Ex خوبی goodness from خوب good, سختی hardship, from سخت hard, برادری brotherhood, from برادر brother; مردی manliness or manhood, from مرد man, معلمی teaching, professorship, from معلم teacher In such words the accent is on the last syllable; thus: مردی mardee'

The ی treated in this category is called ياء مصدری the ی giving (to a noun) the sense of an infinitive, verbal noun, or gerund

(3) Added to nouns, the letter ی changes them to adjectives, and thus becomes the equivalent of such E suffixes as -en, -y, -al, -ar, -ish, -ous, -ary, -able, etc Ex چوبی wooden, from چوب wood, سنگی stonny, from سنگ stone; دندانی costal, from دند rib, قمری lunar, from قمر moon, رسوبی sedimentary, from رسوب sediment; کتابی bookish or book-shaped, from کتاب book; پیاری bulbous, from پیاز bulb or onion; فارسی Persian, from فارس Fars; اصفهائی of Isfahan, مردی dying, about to die, from مردن to die (infinitives being regarded as nouns); خوردنی eatable or edible, from خوردن to eat, لعنی curled from لعنت curse, etc

vowel ا Ex موسى moosa, Moses, عسی eesa, Jesus, یحیی
yahya, John, etcThe grammatical uses of ی are mainly as follows:(1) It serves as an indefinite article at the end of a noun Ex اسی as'bi, a horse, گوسی goo'shi, an ear, ترسی tar'si, a fear; مردی
mordan'i, a dying In such words
the accent is on the penultimate syllable, since the ی amounts really to a separate word, thus, مردی mar'di, a manThe ی treated in this category—may be added also to a plural noun, giving it an indefinite nature, or a sense rendered by the E word 'certain' Ex ۱ من کماهایی دارم که سودمند است (a)The 32nd ی (ya', yeh) letter of the P alphabet, and the 28 th of the Ar, corresponding to y in E It denotes the number 10 in the Ar numerical alphabet.The letter ی is both a consonant and a vowel As examples of the former case may be cited آی yak, one, حیات hayat, life, ی ay, come thou, عیب ayb, a defect or vice, etcAs a vowel, ی is equivalent to the E ee, or to the Fr i occurring in the word police Ex شیر sheer, lion or milk; بیست beest twenty, خوبی khoobe, goodness, etcIn certain Ar words the vowel ی is pronounced as the dead, which is the pl. of مردۀ mordeh, dead (person), or مردگان bandegan, slaves or servants, which is the pl. of بندۀ bandeh. But when it is intended to pluralize such words with the ending ها, the final ه is generally dropped, unless they are confused with similar words of different meanings. For example the pl. of لانه laneh 'nest', may be written لانها or لانه‌ها, but in جامه‌ها the pl. of جامه jameh, clothing, the final ه should be preserved, or the word might be confused with جامها jamha, cups.

In cases when the P. word is pluralized by means of the Ar. fem. ending -at, (which, after all, is a vulgarism or barbarism), the final ه is changed to ح. Ex. نوشته neveshteh, writings; نوشتجات neveshtejat, writings.

Ar. feminines terminating in ة t sound, are usually written in P. so that the final ة is changed either to ت, as in رحمة written rahmat, 'mercy', or to the mute ه, as in حاملة hamelat, pregnant, written hamelah, which however is generally though vulgarly, pronounced hamelch. (In the first volume of the present work, the author has transliterated such words as if they ended in eh, according to the vulgar pronunciation. But in the second volume the strict rule of giving them the ah sound has been observed, and hence واقه is transliterated vaghe-ah.)

The mute ه at the end of P. words exhibits chiefly three grammatical uses. (1) It is the usual ending of a past participle, as in کشته koshteh killed, or رفته rafteh, gone. (2) It is used in

The 31st letter of ا (ha, heh) the P. alphabet, and the 27th of the Ar., corresponding to h in English. Being a slight aspirate, it should not properly be pronounced deep in the throat as is the Ar. ح, but the Iranians generally pronounce both ه and ح alike. For distinction, the former is often called های دور hayeh-havvaz, and the latter های حطی hayeh-hottee from their relative positions in the Arabic numerical alphabet, where the value of ه is 5.

When this letter appears as ه, it is called هَاء مدور or هَاء گرد the round ha, as in the word ماه mah, moon; but when it assumes the shape ه it is called هَاء دو چشم the two-eyed ha, as in هر har each.

Besides its use as a consonant, the letter h often occurs in its mute nature at the end of such P. words as خانه etc., where it is used to represent the vowel sound —zabar, since in P., unlike Arabic, no word may be written so that its last letter is marked by a vowel-point. Thus خانه and تشنه are to be pronounced khanah and teshnah respectively. However, in this dictionary, they are represented as khaneh and teshneh, the way they are pronounced usually, and especially in Tehran. (There are also a few words in which the final mute ه represents the vowel-sound —zeer, as چه cheh, what, سه seh, three, and که keh, who. Compare this last with که keh, small or young).

A P. word ending in mute ه, and requiring the pl. termination ان, changes the final ه to ک, as in مردگان mordegan, the [Note 1. The coordinate conjunction و is often pronounced as the short o. Ex. مان و او رفتیم mano-oo rafteem, he and I went. This is particularly the case (1) in poetry, as in نشستند و گفتند " neshas'tando-gof'tando-bar'khastand, they sat, and talked, and rose; (2) when the coordinate members are so closely connected that they may be regarded as a compound. Ex. زن و بچه zano-bachcheh; wife and children, family; پنجاه و دو panjaho-do, fifty-two.

[Note 2. In Ar also, و is the coordinate conjunction, and is pronounced wa]

2 A dish Ex شوربا = شوروا
[Only in comp] و (۲) = باز

1 Back or again Ex و اما, etc which see in the vocab

2 Colloq or vulg Open [as in واکردن = to open]

[Note. Although و is originally the same as و, compound words with و should be especially looked in the vocab for the sake of slight differences in meaning!]

Alas! Oh! و (۳) ح asafa, [Rare except in وا اسفا va-asafa,
alas!, and وا عجا va-ajaba, what a wonder! wonderful!]

[Vulg interjection و (۴) ح mostly used by women] You

The 30th letter of the ا (va) P alphabet, and the 26th of the Ar, where its numerical value is 6

The letter و is both a vowel and a consonant. As a vowel, it is equal to the E long oo, as in پوست poost, skin. In a few instances, however, it is pronounced as the short o in the E. word obey. These are دو do, two, تو to, thou; and چو cho (apocopated form of چون), when or as. In such cases و represents the vowel-point ز peesh, since in P, unlike Arabic, no word may be written so that its last letter is marked by a vowel-point.

As a consonant, it is pronounced either as v, as in دیوار deevār, wall, or as w, as in و, now, new.

Between ح and the letters ا-ی and a few others which are rare, the vowel و is not heard. Ex خواهر khahar, خوش kheesh, خود khod, حور khōr, khosh. In these cases it is called (معدوله see), the sound of which however is wholly or partially preserved among certain tribes. Thus خواهر is pronounced by the Lōrs khwar.

When a foreign word with an o sound is transliterated in P, the o sound, whether long or short, is expressed by و. Ex لوکوموتیو lo. comotive, written also لکوموتیو. But this custom is gradually dying out.

The grammatical value of و is that, when affixed to a few nouns, it makes them adjectives. Ex کرم خور worm-eaten, from کرم worm.

1 And و (va, o) ح ع یا ح ر.
Ex قلم شکست و مداد گم شد. The pen broke and the pencil was lost.

the Persian alphabet, and the tenth of the Arabic, corresponding to r in English It is never soft as in 'power' or 'car', it is pronounced as in 'free' It is sometimes called راء مهله ra-ch mohmaleh, i.e. the undotted ر so that it may be distinguished from ر which is dotted

As a numeral it represents the number 200 in the Ar numerical alphabet

A particle suffixed to ر (ra)

nouns to denote the objective
case Its main uses are as follows:

1 It is the regular sign of the definite direct object Ex کتابرا خریدم particle را the sentence would mean 'I bought books' or 'I bought a book'

2 It amounts in meaning to the prep به governing an indirect object Ex مرا بگو Tell me The other way would be می بگو Say

(it) to me The substitute را occurs especially in sentences where the verb takes a double object

Ex مرا صدی داد He gave me an advice,

for می بیدی داد He gave an advice

to me

3 It denotes the sort of accusative

case which is governed in English

by the prep 'of' Ex نادشاهرا گوید

It is said of a king The particle را in this case would be the equivalent of the Persian ار or راجع به

4. It is added to a few nouns to form an independent adverb, or a noun partaking of the nature of an interjection Ex خدا را (a)

for God's sake [ب = ادره خدا]

(b) by some chance, it happened

that

در is used in Persian as a prep

denoting time, no prep is used in English Thus در دو سال قبل

is rendered two years ago, and در هفته آینده is translated next week

However in Persian also this preposition may be omitted]

[Note 2 Double prepositions in Persian are rendered either by a single prep in English or by a

prepositional phrase, as follows:

Before, in front of, در پیش

near; with

Behind, at the back در پس

of, after

At the side of, beside, در بر

near, in the bosom of

Under, beneath در زیر

On, above, upon روی = روی

But although I have called the above double prepositions, each one is in reality a prepositional phrase if it is borne in mind that the second element is originally a noun]

[Note 3 In poetry sometimes the prep در follows the noun, it being left to the prep to precede the noun at the same time Ex دریا

At sea there در مایع یشمار است

is a great deal to profit by]

The sixth letter of the ج (jeem)
Persian alphabet and the fifth of the Arabic, corresponding to j or soft g in English It is sometimes called ح عربی to distinguish it from چ which is called both «cheh» and ح فارسی

1 As a numeral, ح represents the number 3 in the Arabic numerical alphabet احدى abjad

2 It is used as an abbreviation
for the Arabic, lunar month called جمادی jamadee

3 In Arabicized words it represents the Persian final letter ه
For example, بنافسج benafsej is the Arabicized form of the Persian بنافشه benafsheh

4 When a Persian word ending in a vowel is to be made a plural with the Arabic plural suffix
-at, the letter ح intervenes to prevent hiatus Ex دواجات davajat, medicines, pl of دوا and سبزیجات sab-zeejat, vegetables, pl of سبزی But if a word ends with a mute ه, this letter is then changed into ح Ex نوشتجات neveshtejat, writings, which is the pl. of نوشته neveshteh

5 The letter ح is interchangeable with چ ch, ژ zh, ز z, and ک hard g
